"You can rest assured that the industry will become better with the younger generation," he told TradeWinds WebTV.

Despite his positive attitude, the grandson of shipowner Leon Lemos is not giving away any of his plans for success.

He quipped: "All of the people who have a gut feeling or a hunch about where the best investment is would not tell you on television or on TradeWinds.

"A lot of people are invested in LNG right now, and a lot of people are invested in drillships as the world is going to need more energy.

"I would suggest to everybody not to order newbuildings, as we have an oversupply of tonnage, and wait patiently on the sidelines.

"Sometimes the best investment is not to invest. There are going to be opportunities in the near future."
